HOW TO USE THIS GUIDE

Mutual Legal Assistance (MLA) is a process by which States seek and provide assistance in gathering evidence for criminal prosecution. MLA describes a formal process for State-to-State cooperation. States may also engage each other informally to gather intelligence and sometimes also to gather evidence. The MLA process is a legal process which must be undertaken with great care, including consideration of domestic legal requirements, foreign legal requirements, and possibly international treaties. As such, ensuring due consideration requires a multi-stage evaluation framework prior to undertaking MLA requests. The likelihood of success of an MLA request requires that all stages of inquiry are thoroughly engaged.

This is critical because international law and domestic law are both at play and, in many cases, both must be complied with to achieve successful MLA.

This Guide is divided according to the steps that must be taken to complete an MLA request. Part I of this guidance presents an overview of considerations prior to beginning an MLA process. Part II introduces several legal bases for engaging in MLA and outlines the criteria that trigger the availability of each legal basis. Part III outlines the MLA requirements for several important source countries for wildlife products that are transited through southern Africa and the MLA requirements for several important destination countries for wildlife products transited through southern Africa

MLA is a Multi-Step Process

Stage of Inquiry	Considerations
Step 1 Is MLA Necessary?	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Can the information be obtained through informal processes, either through direct communication or through public means?• Does the information sought require execution of a court order or other compulsory means?• Is the information likely to be evidence for use in a criminal proceeding that must comply with domestic admissibility rules?
Step 2 Legal Basis for the MLA request	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• Are the criteria met for triggering an appropriate legal basis?• What type of legal assistance is permitted?• Can any other requirements for use of the established legal basis be met?
Step 3 Compliance with national legal requirements	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• What criteria must be met for admissibility in a criminal proceeding?• Is confidentiality desirable?
Step 4 Compliance with foreign legal requirements	<ul style="list-style-type: none">• What type of assistance may be sought?• Can foreign order be enforced, or is a domestic order necessary?• What use restrictions exist?• What costs must be borne?• What is the required format and content?• What is the scope of confidentiality allowed?

PART I: IS MLA NECESSARY?

Deciding when and whether to trigger MLA is an important decision that depends on what kind of information is sought and the intended use of that information. The following section describes several initial considerations, based on the following questions that should be asked at the outset of any MLA inquiry:

- Can the information be obtained through informal processes, either through direct communication or through public means?
- Does the information sought require execution of a court order or other compulsory means?
- Is the information likely to be evidence for use in a criminal proceeding that must comply with domestic admissibility rules?

In general, MLA is a tool for gathering evidence from another jurisdiction that qualifies as admissible in court. Importantly, MLA is a process for obtaining evidence, not necessarily intelligence, but equally importantly not all evidence requires MLA. Asking the above questions will help facilitate a decision as to whether MLA is necessary.

Informal exchanges of information may occur through investigator-to-police relationships or through prosecutor-to-prosecutor relationships. Informal exchange of intelligence may include the following:

- Routine inquiries that do not require coercive powers, such as sharing police files and other documentation, asking general questions about wildlife trafficking trends, etc.

- Obtaining public records, such as land registry documents and papers relating to registration of companies, may often be obtained administratively. Such documents might even be available as open-source material, so always check.
- Locating witnesses or suspects.
- Contacting potential witnesses to see if they are willing to assist the authorities of the requesting country voluntarily.
- Collecting a witness statement from a voluntary witness, particularly in circumstances where that witness's evidence is likely to be non-contentious.
- Obtaining lists of previous convictions and of basic subscriber details from communications and service providers that do not require a court order.

Sometimes information is publicly available and may be obtained through direct contact with appropriate individuals or through internet searches. It cannot be over-emphasised that it is important to take into account domestic requirements regarding the use of information and foreign legal requirements regarding how such information may be obtained when considering whether direct communication is the preferred approach.

Information that usually may only be obtained through a judicial order or some other compulsory measures, and thus likely MLA, may include the following, though this list is not exhaustive:

- Obtaining testimony from a non-voluntary witness
- Seeking to interview a person as a suspect,
- Obtaining account information and documentary evidence from banks and financial institutions
- Requests for search and seizure
- Internet records and the contents of emails
- The transfer of consenting persons into custody in order for testimony to be given

In many contexts, building a case requires both intelligence and evidence and may require both informal cooperation and MLA. Building relationships early in investigations and case development can ease considerably the risks and delay that often accompany MLA. Engaging early and informally is more likely to ensure proper preparation in advance of an MLA request and a higher likelihood of a successful MLA request.

Domestic admissibility rules may dictate whether MLA is more desirable than an informal process, or even in some cases, necessary. A desire for information that meets domestic admissibility rules is an important pivot point—the point at which an investigation becomes a criminal prosecution. Successful MLA requests require a demonstration of sufficient evidence justifying the request; thus it is incumbent upon investigators and prosecutors in the requesting State to ensure that a reasonable amount of investigatory work and informal cooperation took place prior to the MLA request. In many instances, the sufficiency of the evidence presented in an MLA request will depend on the nature of the assistance sought. For example, a search of a person's home, requiring a search warrant, is likely to require more evidence than simply interviewing a witness. These considerations depend heavily on the law of the requested State (see Part IV).

Whether information may be received informally or formally through an MLA request, it is important to consider and communicate to the requesting country that domestic admissibility requirements in the requesting State, including, but not limited to, the rules regarding certification, authentication, and notification of rights. The full scope of these rules is fully described in Part III.

Informal Communications: Points to Consider

Different channels exist for obtaining information outside of approaching a designated authority with an MLA request. During the early phase of an investigation, these channels, such as police-to-police communication or any other mode of direct communication, often yield valuable information that may advance an investigation, provide the basis for an MLA request, or even lead to evidence for use in a criminal proceeding. Additionally, such communication cultivates relationships that may be helpful when the information-gathering phase transitions to formal MLA. Note that any informal contact should be referenced in an MLA request.

However, when conducting informal communication for the purpose of obtaining information, be wary of several potential unintended consequences:

1. First, consider whether your request for information or cooperation may be perceived as an attempt to conduct a foreign criminal investigation, which may violate the laws of that State. Often early, robust groundwork communication can minimise this risk.
2. Second, take care regarding how the information may be used in Malawi and how it may be obtained in the requested State. If information is obtained informally without meeting admissibility standards, later use of such information could compromise the success of a prosecution.

PART II: FINDING A LEGAL BASIS FOR MLA

Once it is clear that MLA is necessary, the next step of the multi-step framework requires the identification of a legal basis for MLA. While informal communication may proceed without a legal basis or specific agreement for the communication, MLA requires identification of a basis in law for pursuing legal assistance. The legal basis is either a treaty or domestic legislation. Treaties that provide a legal basis for MLA include international treaties, regional agreements, and bilateral treaties. In the absence of a treaty that works to provide a legal basis, domestic law in the potential requested country may allow MLA, even when a treaty basis does not exist.

Because the legal basis may derive from either a treaty or from domestic law, this step is a two-part analysis. First, consider whether a treaty provides a basis for an MLA request. Second, if a treaty is not available as a legal basis, consider whether domestic legislation in the requested State provides a legal basis for MLA.

Legal Basis for MLA:

- Does a treaty provide the legal basis for MLA?
- If not, does domestic legislation in the Requested State allow MLA without a treaty basis?

To assess whether a treaty or domestic legislation provides an adequate legal basis for a particular MLA request, several questions should be asked:

- Are the criteria met for triggering an appropriate legal basis?
- What type of legal assistance is permitted?
- Can any other requirements for use of the established legal basis be met?
- What process, form, and content rules must be complied with?

TREATY-BASED MLA

In the wildlife crime context, the two most important international agreements for MLA are the United Nations Convention against Transnational Crime (UNTOC) and the United Nations Convention against Corruption (UNCAC). If both the requesting and the requested State are Parties and all other prerequisites are met, then either could provide the legal basis for MLA. Additionally, the Southern African Development Community (SADC) has a Protocol on Mutual Legal Assistance that could also provide a legal basis. Countries may also have bilateral MLA agreements on MLA with other countries—these types of treaties are also known as “Mutual Legal Assistance Treaties” or MLATS.

For all treaty-based MLA opportunities, specific criteria must be met in order to lawfully employ that particular treaty as a basis for MLA. It is important to take great care in considering whether the criteria are met because an MLA request may be rejected if not. Typically, criteria focus on the following issues:

1. Are both the requesting State and the requested State Parties to the treaty?
2. Which offences trigger the applicability of the legal basis?
3. Is dual criminality a requirement?

UNTOC: Points to Consider

What is a “serious crime”?

“Serious crime” means “conduct constituting an offence punishable by a maximum deprivation of liberty of at least four years or a more serious penalty.”

When is an offence “transnational in nature”?

An offence is transnational in nature if:

- a) It is committed in more than one State;
- b) It is committed in one State but a substantial part of its preparation, planning, direction, or control takes place in another State;
- c) It is committed in one State but involves an organised criminal group that engages in criminal activities in more than one State; or
- d) It is committed in one State but has substantial effects in another State.

When does an offence involve an “organised criminal group”?

“Organised criminal group” shall mean a structured group of three or more persons, existing for a period of time and acting in concert with the aim of committing one or more serious crimes or offences established in accordance with this Convention, in order to obtain, directly or indirectly, a financial or other material benefit.

3. WHAT TYPE OF ASSISTANCE IS AVAILABLE?

Once it has been determined that the necessary criteria for a legal basis have been met, it is important to assess whether the type of assistance required may be sought on that legal basis. In general, each legal basis—whether a treaty or domestic law—will define the types of assistance that may be provided. In all cases, domestic legislation should be carefully checked because, even when a treaty provides the legal basis for MLA, domestic legislation may restrict the type of assistance that may be provided by a particular requested country, depending on its own laws regarding due process, criminal procedures, etc.

The following table provides examples of the type of assistance available using UNTOC, UNCAC, or the SADC Protocol as a basis for MLA. Descriptions of the types of assistance available under domestic legislation in the priority countries may found in the country-specific Annexes.

Treaty	Types of Assistance
UNTOC	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • taking evidence or statements from persons • effecting service of judicial documents • executing service of judicial documents • executing searches and seizures, and freezing • examining objects and sites • providing information, evidentiary items and expert evaluations • documents and records, including government, bank, financial, corporate or business records • identifying or tracing proceeds of crime, property, instrumentalities or other things for evidentiary purposes • facilitating the voluntary appearance of persons in the requesting State party • any other type of assistance that is not contrary to the domestic law of the requested State party

SADC Protocol	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> • locating and identifying persons, property, objects and items • serving documents, including documents seeking the • attendance of persons and providing returns of such service • providing information documents and records • providing objects and temporary transfer of exhibits • search and seizure • taking evidence obtaining statements or both • authorising the presence of persons from the Requesting State at the execution of requests • ensuring the availability of detained persons to give evidence or to assist in possible investigations • facilitating the appearance of witnesses or the assistance of persons in investigations • taking possible measures for location, restrain, seizure, freezing or forfeiture of the proceeds of crime

DOMESTIC LEGISLATION AS A BASIS FOR MLA

When treaty-based MLA is not an option, domestic legislation in the requested State may provide an independent basis for submission of an MLA request. In fact, many countries accept MLA requests without a treaty-basis. If none of the available treaty-based MLA opportunities work to provide a legal basis, then the Requesting State must evaluate whether the Requested State affords an opportunity for non-treaty MLA through domestic legislation. Amongst Commonwealth countries, such as Zimbabwe, Kenya, Singapore, and others of interest, domestic legislation should conform generally with the principles of the Harare Scheme for Mutual Legal Assistance in Criminal Matters.

Reading domestic legislation carefully is important because prerequisites such as dual criminality or reciprocity may be necessary to trigger the availability of MLA.

Dual criminality: Although the modern trend is to relax barriers to MLA as is reflected in many of the treaties that might provide a legal basis, domestic legislation may still require “dual criminality,” which means the criminal offence that is being investigated or prosecuted in the requesting State must also be a criminal offence in the requested State. A determination as to whether a particular criminal offence exists in both States may be made in one of two ways. First, legislation might require that the same charge does exist in both States—for example, that “illegal possession of a firearm” exists as a criminal offence in Malawi, the requesting State, and Uganda, the requested State. Second, domestic legislation or practice might allow a dual criminality finding to be made when the conduct associated with a particular offence is also criminalised in the requested State, even when the actual charge might differ. The latter approach is preferred and modern guidance suggests its adoption. If domestic legislation requires a dual criminality determination, care and a detail-oriented approach should be taken in explaining the relevant underlying facts and the nature of the illegal behaviour.

Reciprocity: Some domestic legislation requires a commitment of reciprocity in MLA assistance. Meeting this request or requirement could be as simple as including a statement expressing willingness to provide similar assistance should the need arise.

In some cases, domestic legislation will also inform Requesting States reasons for denying MLA requests. Relevant domestic legislation may include MLA-specific legislation, anti-corruption legislation, and anti-money laundering legislation. Check Section IV for the requirements for specific domestic legislation.

PART III: COMPLIANCE WITH FOREIGN DOMESTIC LEGAL REQUIREMENTS

Regardless of the choice of legal basis, domestic law in the requested State should be considered when drafting an MLA request. Domestic MLA legislation is likely to outline several elements that are necessary to consider and include in an MLA request relating to scope of assistance, content and form of the request, cost-sharing, and others. A thorough reading of domestic legislation is advised, but the following questions are useful for guiding an analysis of foreign MLA legislation:

- What type of assistance may be sought?
- Can a foreign order be enforced, or is a domestic order necessary?
- What use restrictions exist?
- What costs must be borne?
- What is required in terms of format and content?
- What is the scope of confidentiality allowed?

In some cases, a Requested State may not have domestic legislation. When MLA is still possible through a multilateral treaty, consideration must be given to the specific form and content requirements as specified in that treaty. For UNTOC, UNCAC, and the SADC Protocol, Annexes 1, 2, and 3, respectively, set out these requirements.

The following tables detail the requirements regarding the questions above as found in the domestic legislation of the focus countries. When drafting MLA requests, it is advisable to consult relevant legislation directly and check for recent updates, such as new addresses. The tables that follow provide an overview of the relevant requirements, but other provisions may be applicable in any given circumstance. It is critical that prior to drafting an MLA request relevant treaties, legislation, and relevant contacts are consulted directly as the tables herein may become outdated and are only intended as summaries of any particular country's requirement.

What is the relevant legislation?	China is party to multilateral agreements that include provisions for mutual legal assistance between parties: The United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organized Crime (UNTOC) (See Annex 1), and the United Nations Convention Against Corruption (UNCAC) (See Annex 2). Requests are acceptable where there are bilateral mutual legal assistance treaties in existence or a UN convention to which both China and the Requesting State are members. Non-treaty Letters of Request must be submitted and granted via China's diplomatic channel via the Department of Treaty and Law, the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of P.R. China.
What are the permissible types of assistance?
When will a request be denied?
Is reciprocity and/or dual criminality required?	Dual criminality is generally required.
What are the form and content requirements for the MLA request?	It is recommended that the Requesting State directly contact the Central Authority in advance. That is called the pre-viewing procedure, which may enable the Requesting State's request to be granted promptly. You may provide your draft version of the request to CNCA by email. The CNCA may prereview it and provide feedback, correction and comments. After receiving the CNCA's feedback, you may finalize your request letter and arrange for translation and finally submit the request for mutual legal assistance to CNCA for reviewing, granting and implementing, particularly in the most serious cases, to ensure the assistance sought is available under the laws of China and meets the legal requirements of China. In addition, the following steps should be followed in every case. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Please ensure that the request for assistance is proportionate to the level of crime being investigated. Given the geographic landscape of China and the limited resources available for law enforcement and judicial authorities in China, you are urged to consider the need for the assistance in question. Please pursue through police-to-police or other law enforcement cooperation channels if the assistance sought is purely for the exchange of information for investigation. The formal assistance channel, that is MLAT, is for seeking assistance for public prosecution and court hearings. If significant resources will be required to execute a request and the offence being investigated is very minor, the request may be given low priority unless conditions to executing your request are set forth by common agreement of the Central Authority for the two sides. 2. In drafting your request, begin by clearly identifying the mutual legal assistance treaty, Conventions (UNCAC, UNTOC, others) or other avenue of cooperation being referred to in seeking the assistance from China, or directly contact with the CNCA for that. 3. All general crimes will be investigated by the Chinese police force across China, led by the Ministry of Public Security. All corruption-related crimes are investigated by the Anti-Corruption Bureau within the public prosecution authorities across China, led by the Supreme People's Procuratorate. Crimes relating to custom will be overseen by the Anti-Smuggling Bureau of the General Administration of Custom of China and its agencies. All public prosecution against crimes is the jurisdiction of public prosecution authorities across China, led by the Supreme People's Procuratorate.

If documentary evidence is needed, please advise the whereabouts of the documents and why you think there is a linkage between the case and the documentation sought. c. If the execution of a search warrant is sought, provide the search warrant issued by the court or other judicial authority of the Requesting State, which specifically refers to the house, person or items. d. If seizure/confiscation of criminal proceeds is requested, you may submit your request followed by seizure/ confiscation order, which may specifically refer to items, assets and proceeds of crime. An official statement may be needed which is written by the prosecutor or judge in charge, in which you may describe how and when the case will be prosecuted and/or sentenced, how the evidential material is to be collected, what proceeding is to be followed, and what and how the verdict will be made, etc. 5. Identify and set out the verbatim text of all relevant legal provisions relating to the investigation and/or prosecution, including applicable penalties. 6. Outline, in specific terms, exactly what you are seeking to obtain from China, and any particular requirements that must be met (for example, certification/authentication needs). In addition, considering the nature of the assistance sought, the following information must be included: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> a. Witness statements/testimony: The Requesting State should provide detailed information about the witness, a question list and the linkage between the case and the witness. b. Documentary evidence: You should advise the whereabouts of the documents and why you think there is linkage between the case and the documentation sought. c. Search and seizure: The Requesting State should provide the search warrant, or the seizure order issued by the court or other judicial authority of the Requesting State, and detailed information about the place to be searched and the property to be seized. d. Enforcing order to seize criminal proceeds: The Requesting State should provide the seizure order and detailed information of the property. e. Enforcing order to confiscate criminal proceeds: The requesting state should provide the confiscation order and detailed information of the property. 7. However, as some disclosure may be necessary, particularly where compulsory measures are required to provide the assistance, if your case is particularly sensitive, the need and reasons for confidentiality should be expressly set out in the request. 8. Identify any time limit within which compliance with the request is desired and the reason for the time constraints (for example, pending court proceeding/time-sensitive investigation). If you face limitation periods, set out the precise dates. 9. Include a list of the names and contact numbers for key law enforcement/prosecution authorities familiar with the case. You should include the name and, where applicable, the contact information of your Central Authority, in the event the CNCA wishes to contact you for the purpose of clarification or obtaining additional information. 10. What is the relevant legislation?	The Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters Act 2002 (Act 621) provides the legal basis for the provision of mutual assistance in criminal matters between Malaysia and foreign States. The Act is to be read with the Mutual Assistance in Criminal Matters Regulations 2003 [P.U.(A)194/2003] Malaysia prefers to use the term “mutual assistance” to avoid the need to distinguish between “legal assistance” provided via the Central Authority to Central Authority regime and “judicial assistance” provided directly between courts pursuant to letters rogatory. Letters rogatory may be issued by an overseas court or tribunal for evidence to be obtained in Malaysia for the purpose of criminal proceedings in the overseas jurisdiction. Under section 18 of the Act, in the case of a non-treaty partner, Malaysia may provide mutual assistance in criminal matters to that state in accordance with a Special Direction of the Minister charged with responsibility for legal affairs if the Minister, on the recommendation of the Attorney General, agrees to accede to the request. Assistance by Malaysia is extended on the basis that where States are members of the Commonwealth, the Commonwealth Scheme on Mutual Assistance Agreement (Harare Scheme) will apply with a requisite undertaking of reciprocity (See Annex 4). Malaysia is also party to multilateral agreements that include provisions for mutual legal assistance between parties: The United Nations Convention Against Transnational Organised Crime (UNTOC) (See Annex 1) and the United Nations Convention Against Corruption (UNCAC) (See Annex 2).
